

Collaborative Health Care Leadership

Program Overview

Health care leaders and providers are operating within a challenging, rapidly changing and fragmented healthcare system. This environment is even more complex as healthcare reform and market forces transform the way healthcare is delivered and managed. Rapid innovation and adaptation to change require a collaborative, interdependent culture and solutions that cut across function, region and profession. Leaders must learn to shift away from the "individual expert" model so common in today's healthcare systems and move towards a model that leverages cross-boundary groups and teams and spans disciplines, levels, functions, generations and professions. These new collaborative groups will be able to integrate knowledge throughout the system and to anticipate and solve unprecedented challenges – all while delivering efficient, high-quality, compassionate patient care across the continuum. This session explore The Center for Creative Leadership model that health systems can use to adapt and thrive in uncertain times by creating direction, alignment and commitment.

Program Objectives

1. Analyze sections of a collaborative healthcare leadership model
2. Identify collaborative strategies designed to achieve departmental and organizational goals
3. Develop collaborative strategies and tactics

About the Speaker

Katrina Coleman, BSN, MSN, has been in the health care industry for 20 years during which she has consulted and coached with hundreds of managers assisting them in developing and implementing skills to help them achieve their goal of running a productive and quality-driven department/unit. As a master's prepared nurse and an ATD-Certified Coach with many years of hospital experience behind her, Katrina understands the needs of leaders and staff as well as the environment in which they operate. Katrina's goal is to assist others in using their own talents and strengths to create quality outcomes.
